

EMPLOYMENT APPEALS BOARD DECISION
2018-EAB-1100

Affirmed
No Disqualification

PROCEDURAL HISTORY: On September 18, 2018, the Oregon Employment Department (the Department) served notice of an administrative decision concluding the employer discharged claimant, but not for misconduct (decision # 92323). The employer filed a timely request for hearing. On October 30, 2018, ALJ Monroe conducted a hearing, and on November 7, 2018 issued Order No. 18-UI-119376, affirming the Department's decision. On November 27, 2018, the employer filed an application for review with the Employment Appeals Board (EAB).

The employer submitted a written argument in which it posed several questions about the account claimant gave at hearing about why he ran out of gas on his way to work on July 28, 2018, and appeared to suggest that claimant's testimony was not credible and that had he taken certain specified steps he reasonably should have been able to report on time for work that day. However, the employer's representative at hearing was given an open-ended opportunity to question claimant about his account and the representative did not ask these questions. Audio at ~31:50. Nor did the employer present any evidence to rebut claimant's hearing testimony, although it was also given that opportunity. Audio at ~33:00. The employer's questions therefore do not change the outcome of this decision, nor did the employer establish that EAB should consider any new information pertaining to those questions under OAR 471-041-0090(2)(b) since the employer did not show that factors or circumstances beyond its control prevented it from asking those questions or presenting such information during the hearing. However, even if we considered the employer's questions, it is not apparent to us that claimant's failure to take any of the particular actions indicated in the employer's written argument, without more, would constitute the type of willful or wantonly negligent behavior needed to demonstrate that claimant engaged in disqualifying misconduct. We therefore considered the employer's written argument only to the extent it was relevant and based upon evidence in the record.

In its written argument, the employer emphasized that claimant's failure to notify the employer before the start of his shift that he was going to be late or absent from work on July 28 violated its progressive discipline program. We do not disagree. However, for purposes of a disqualification from unemployment benefits, the employer must show not only that claimant violated that program but that that claimant's violation was the result of willful or wantonly negligent behavior. See OAR 471-030-0038(1)(c) (January 11, 2018), OAR 471-030-0038(3)(a); Babcock v. Employment Division, 25 Or App 661, 550 P2d 1233 (1976). Depending on the reasons and circumstances underlying a violation of an employer's standard, that violation may or may not be willful or wantonly negligent. On this record, the employer failed to present evidence demonstrating that claimant's violation of the employer's progressive discipline program on July 28 was attributable to willful or wantonly negligent behavior on his part.

EAB reviewed the entire hearing record. On de novo review and pursuant to ORS 657.275(2), the Order under review is adopted.

DECISION: Order No. 18-UI-119376 is affirmed.
