

EMPLOYMENT APPEALS BOARD DECISION
2019-EAB-0083

Affirmed
Disqualification

PROCEDURAL HISTORY: On December 6, 2018, the Oregon Employment Department (the Department) served notice of an administrative decision concluding the employer discharged claimant for misconduct (decision # 133415). Claimant filed a timely request for hearing. On January 4, 2019, ALJ Wyatt conducted a hearing at which the employer failed to appear, and on January 9, 2019, issued Order No. 19-UI-122378, concluding claimant voluntarily left work without good cause. On January 23, 2019, claimant filed an application for review with the Employment Appeals Board (EAB).

FINDINGS OF FACT: (1) Kaiser Foundation Hospitals employed claimant as a care coordinator from July 6, 2015<sup>1</sup> to November 19, 2018.

(2) Because claimant had often been tardy to work, the employer placed him on a corrective work plan to improve his attendance. Subsequently, additional incidents of tardiness resulted in claimant advancing to the third step of the plan although, as of November 19, 2018, additional opportunities to correct his attendance issues remained. Claimant had also been attending school and recently had obtained a Master's Degree. After doing so, claimant's career goal was to advance to a supervisory, management or director role in employment.

(3) On November 19, 2018, claimant was not tardy to work. However, that day he met with his manager and a human resources representative to discuss his employment. The employer confirmed that there were no open supervisory or management positions available, and that it was not likely that any would become available in the near future. Claimant also knew that he had advanced as far as he could in his own department. Although claimant had the option of continuing to work for the employer as a care coordinator, that option was no longer appealing to him. Consequently, he chose to negotiate a resignation agreement with the employer, and resigned that day.

CONCLUSIONS AND REASONS: We agree with the ALJ. Claimant voluntarily left work without good cause.

A claimant who leaves work voluntarily is disqualified from the receipt of benefits unless he (or she) proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he had good cause for leaving work when he did. ORS 657.176(2)(c); Young v. Employment Department, 170 Or App 752, 13 P3d 1027 (2000). “Good cause” is defined, in relevant part, as a reason of such gravity that a reasonable and prudent person of normal sensitivity, exercising ordinary common sense, would have no reasonable alternative but to leave work. OAR 471-030-0038(4) (January 11, 2018). The standard is objective. McDowell v. Employment Department, 348 Or 605, 612, 236 P3d 722 (2010). A claimant who quits work must show that no reasonable and prudent person would have continued to work for his employer for an additional period of time.

Claimant resigned on November 19, 2018 because he had become dissatisfied with working as a care coordinator, and the employer had confirmed that no supervisory or management positions in which he was interested were available at that time, or would be in the near future. Although claimant believed that he had advanced as high as he could within his department and that he would not achieve a career goal by remaining with the employer, the care coordinator position offered him an opportunity to continue his employment, presumably at the same level of compensation, indefinitely. Under the circumstances, claimant failed to show that his personal dissatisfaction with his job constituted a situation of such gravity that he had no reasonable alternative but to quit or that no reasonable and prudent person in his circumstances would have continued to work for the employer for an additional period of time.

Claimant voluntarily left work without good cause and is disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits until he has earned at least four times his weekly benefit amount from work in subject employment.
