

EMPLOYMENT APPEALS BOARD DECISION
2019-EAB-1115

Affirmed
Disqualification

PROCEDURAL HISTORY: On October 16, 2019, the Oregon Employment Department (the Department) served notice of an administrative decision concluding claimant quit work without good cause (decision # 94114). Claimant filed a timely request for hearing. On November 7, 2019, ALJ Wymer conducted a hearing and issued Order No. 19-UI-139421, affirming the Department's decision. On November 21, 2019, claimant filed an application for review with the Employment Appeals Board (EAB).

Claimant did not declare that she provided a copy of her argument to the opposing party or parties as required by OAR 471-041-0080(2)(a) (May 13, 2019). The argument also contained information that was not part of the hearing record, and did not show that factors or circumstances beyond claimant's reasonable control prevented her from offering the information during the hearing as required by OAR 471-041-0090 (May 13, 2019). EAB considered only information received into evidence at the hearing when reaching this decision. See ORS 657.275(2).

FINDINGS OF FACT: (1) Jeld-Wen, Inc., a window and door manufacturer, employed claimant from September 23, 2019 to September 27, 2019.

(2) The employer hired claimant as a level 2 customer service agent, which handled the employer's national accounts, such as The Home Depot and Lowe's. Other agents serviced smaller hardware stores.

(3) On September 23, 2019, claimant started a three-week training program that consisted of sitting with other customer service agents so that the claimant could learn how to handle phone calls and work the computer system. Some of claimant's trainers only serviced the local hardware stores and provided claimant with instructions that were different from the instructions she received from agents servicing the national accounts. The employer allowed for an extended training period if the claimant needed it.

(4) Claimant became increasingly frustrated with her training program because she received what she considered to be inconsistent instructions from various agents, the amount of information she had to learn, and not being assigned a computer and procedure manual to use. The training program was not giving claimant the clear, concise instructions and procedures that she felt she needed to thrive in the position. Transcript at 7.

(5) On September 25, 2019 claimant shared her concerns with the employer that there was too much to learn and that the job might not be right for her. Claimant also inquired about other job opportunities with the employer. There were no other job openings available to claimant at that time.

(6) On September 27, 2019, claimant voluntarily quit her job.

A claimant who leaves work voluntarily is disqualified from the receipt of benefits unless they prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that they had good cause for leaving work when they did. ORS 657.176(2)(c); Young v. Employment Department, 170 Or App 752, 13 P3d 1027 (2000). “Good cause . . . is such that a reasonable and prudent person of normal sensitivity, exercising ordinary common sense, would leave work.” OAR 471-030-0038(4) (December 23, 2018). “[T]he reason must be of such gravity that the individual has no reasonable alternative but to leave work.” OAR 471-030-0038(4). The standard is objective. McDowell v. Employment Department, 348 Or 605, 612, 236 P3d 722 (2010). A claimant who quits work must show that no reasonable and prudent person would have continued to work for their employer for an additional period of time.

Claimant voluntarily quit her job without good cause. Claimant had only worked for the employer two days when she started to realize that her job was not a good fit for her, and had only been through about a week of her three-week training program when she quit. Although claimant did not like not having her own work computer, the training regimen, learning about door and window parts, or receiving what she perceived as inconsistent instructions from her trainers, none of the issues as claimant described them were grave, much less so grave that she had no other alternative but to quit her job when she did. Rather than quitting before completing her training, she had the option to complete her training and determine at that time whether or not the job fit. With respect to the training, she had the alternative of expressing her concerns and frustrations to her manager, asking for the things she thought would make her training easier, like a computer or procedure manual, telling the manager that she was confused learning from employees assigned to service two kinds of accounts, and giving the employer the opportunity to address her concerns before quitting over them. Since claimant did not leave work due to a grave situation, and had reasonable alternatives to quitting when she did, on this record, it does not appear that no reasonable and prudent person would have continued working under the circumstances that claimant described.

Claimant had the burden to show that she quit work with good cause, and, for the reasons stated above, has not met her burden. Claimant voluntarily left work without good cause, and is disqualified from receiving benefits based on this work separation.

DECISION: Order No. 19-UI-139421 is affirmed.
