

EMPLOYMENT APPEALS BOARD DECISION
2021-EAB-0817

Affirmed
Disqualification

PROCEDURAL HISTORY: On December 30, 2020, the Oregon Employment Department (the Department) served notice of an administrative decision concluding that claimant voluntarily quit work without good cause and was disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits effective November 8, 2020 based on the work separation (decision # 81019). Claimant filed a timely request for hearing. On September 16, 2021, ALJ Lucas conducted a hearing, at which the employer failed to appear, and on September 21, 2021 issued Order No. 21-UI-175206, affirming decision # 81019. On October 7, 2021, claimant filed an application for review with the Employment Appeals Board (EAB).

WRITTEN ARGUMENT: EAB considered claimant's written argument when reaching this decision.

FINDINGS OF FACT: (1) Georgia-Pacific Consumer Products employed claimant as an assembly line worker from October 12, 2020 until November 14, 2020.

(2) Claimant's job required him to work on a napkin assembly line that ran continuously. When the line produced enough napkins to fill a pallet, and when it was claimant's turn, claimant was required to use a forklift to remove the pallet, replace it with a new pallet, and return the forklift in time for other workers to use it. Claimant had no previous experience using a forklift and had difficulty returning the forklift to the line quickly and in a manner that he thought was safe.

(3) In late October or early November 2020, claimant's floor manager and plant manager met with claimant informally to discuss his performance. The topic of claimant's forklift speed came up, and claimant explained that his speed was slow because he was focusing on safety as he trained on the forklift. The managers made no comment and moved on to their next topic.

(4) On November 14, 2020, claimant had a second informal meeting with his managers about his performance. At the meeting, claimant's forklift speed again came up and claimant again stated that his forklift speed was slow because he wanted to "make sure that we're doing this safely." Audio Record at 20:09. The plant manager had no response, while the floor manager commented that he did not think forklift driving was “that hard” and that the floor manager had personally “picked it up real fast” without having prior experience. Audio Record at 20:41. Claimant thought the floor manager’s comment was dismissive.

(5) Both meetings were casual discussions “about how things [we]re going,” rather than formal performance reviews. Audio Record at 25:15. Claimant did not receive any discipline from the employer at the meetings because of his forklift speed or otherwise.

(6) On November 14, 2020, after the second performance meeting concluded, claimant finished his shift and went home. After he got home, claimant thought about his work situation and concluded that the employer expected him to drive the forklift too fast to maintain a safe work environment given his experience level. Claimant decided that day to quit working for the employer. Claimant did not report for his next shift and never worked for the employer again.

A claimant who leaves work voluntarily is disqualified from the receipt of benefits unless they prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that they had good cause for leaving work when they did. ORS 657.176(2)(c); Young v. Employment Department, 170 Or App 752, 13 P3d 1027 (2000). “Good cause . . . is such that a reasonable and prudent person of normal sensitivity, exercising ordinary common sense, would leave work.” OAR 471-030-0038(4) (September 22, 2020). “[T]he reason must be of such gravity that the individual has no reasonable alternative but to leave work.” OAR 471-030-0038(4). The standard is objective. McDowell v. Employment Department, 348 Or 605, 612, 236 P3d 722 (2010). A claimant who quits work must show that no reasonable and prudent person would have continued to work for their employer for an additional period of time.

Claimant did not establish good cause for voluntarily leaving work. Claimant quit work on November 14, 2020 because he believed the employer expected him to drive the forklift too fast to maintain a safe work environment given his experience level. Claimant’s situation was not grave because, more likely than not, he could have continued to drive the forklift at the slower speed he considered safe while he gained more experience with the forklift and improved in his position, rather than quit when he did. Although claimant’s managers had mentioned his forklift speed in the two informal meetings, those were casual discussions and the record does not show that claimant faced any employer discipline because of his forklift speed. Given that the option to continue to drive the forklift at the slower speed while gaining additional experience and familiarity with the forklift was more likely than not available to claimant, the record does not show that a reasonable and prudent person would leave work when claimant did. Because claimant failed to show that no reasonable and prudent person would have continued to work for the employer for an additional period of time, he quit work without good cause. Claimant is disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits effective November 8, 2020.
